Jim began his music career at age seven playing the piano in a local talent show in his hometown Shirley, Massachusetts. He studied piano privately with retired pianist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Franklin Tisdale.

Jim decided he wanted to be an organist when he was eight, but being so young, his height didn't allow him to reach the pedals. By the age of eleven, the local Catholic Church needed an organist. He wanted the position more than anything, convincing his parents to contact the church. Still being a little too short to reach the pedals, the pastor stated that Jim would "grow into it", immediately offering him the position. November 1967 Jim began his organ career. The following year, he earned the confidence of the church's adult choir and was officially conducting weekly choir rehearsals. By the time he reached his senior high school year, he directed, choreographed and performed in the musical "Godspell"; earning him several awards as pianist and vocal soloist. He was the 1974 Massachusetts Music Educators Association All State Junior Guest Choral Conductor leading 350 a cappella members. His choral directorship commands conventional and unconventional techniques with steadfast results. His conductor skills were nurtured by Marion Balch, Stephen Cleobury, Wendell Purrington, and Deborah Walsh.

Jim oversaw the construction of the church's newly acquired pipe organ when he was eighteen. Working directly with the organ builders on this three-month project taught him how to maintain and tune the organ. Jim is a baritone soloist studying with dramatic coloratura mezzo-soprano Marion Balch. He served as Sub-Dean for the Monadnock Chapter of the American Guild of Organists in southern New Hampshire. The years of service have afforded the opportunity to perform at hundreds of weddings, funerals, ordinations, dedications, and concerts. He is a former member of the Salisbury Singers of Worcester, Massachusetts. He is a current member of the AGO Tampa Chapter, St. Petersburg & Clearwater, Florida.
